BI605

Bible Backgrounds (5 ECTS)

Mondays | 13:30 - 16:30

Dr. Mario Tafferner & Dr. J.D. Atkins

God chose to give us his inspired word not in a single book that fell from heaven but in a collection of many books originally written by dozens of human authors (in three distinct languages) to a variety of people groups living in a variety of different historical and cultural contexts. In light of this divine choice, this course offers a broad introduction to the original contexts in which the biblical books were written: the Ancient Near Eastern background of the Old Testament and the Greco-Roman and Second Temple Jewish worlds that provide the backdrop for the New Testament. Most importantly, the course equips students for more accurate biblical interpretation by training them in essential methods for exploring the geographical, historical, social, and ideational (incl. mythological) aspects of these backgrounds. It will also help students develop wisdom in thinking through and evaluating parallels between Scripture and other texts from the ancient world.

Department of Systematic and Historical Theology:

ST750
Theology in Culture (5 ECTS)
Fridays | 13:30 - 16:30
Dr. Szazsi Bene
This course provides a critical examination of cultural formation and worldview from a biblical-theological perspective. Engaging James K. A. Smith's "Desiring the Kingdom: Worship, Worldview, and Cultural Formation", students will explore the formative power of cultural practices and their relationship to Christian worship and discipleship. Particular attention will be given to the analysis of popular culture as a site of theological significance, considering how cultural narratives, rituals, and artifacts shape human identity and desire. Students will develop a biblical-theological hermeneutic for interpreting culture and will cultivate the capacity for discerning, faithful engagement with contemporary cultural phenomena.

Department of Practical and Intercultural Theology:
